3. Visited Senator Kuchel's administrative assistant, a Mrs. Whalen, and told her that CIA had reviewed the personnel file of a [redacted] a constituent of the Senator, and had concluded that we did not have any job openings for [redacted] I did not go into details, except to say that [redacted] had been interviewed by [redacted] [redacted] and that the report was neither critical nor enthusiastic. In view of this, and in further view of the fact that we are operating under very strict personnel ceilings, we simply have not been able to find a slot to make the best use of [redacted] talents. Mrs. Whalen was to give this message to the Senator, and she felt that the matter would possibly end there. I did agree, pursuant to a request from her, that although a special trip for the purpose certainly was not justified, we would be happy to see [redacted] if he happened to be in Washington at any time in the near future. 4. Briefed the Director on Senator Saltonstall's request that CIA give him some definitive guidance as to what he can and cannot say as a witness on the Senate Floor in opposition to the Mansfield Resolution. The Director called Senator Saltonstall and arranged an appointment to see him this evening on the matter.

5. The Director agreed that there was no particular reason for contacting Senator Neely on the CIA building at this time.
